A. Natural rubber is made from latex, the milky liquid of the rubber tree which grows in such hot lands as Brazil. In order to get the latex, workers cut several slits in the tree bark and let the latex drip into cups. At the factory, the latex is cooked and mixed with chemicals and turned into the many kinds of rubber we use today. Rubber can also be made by man from non-latex sources. Many of the rubber-like materials we use are made from chemicals obtained from such raw materials as petroleum and coal. This kind of rubber is known as synthetic rubber.
